Title: History of Pagan VI

Centuries after the miracle of Stellos, five Theurgists sought to quell the raging fires of Pyros, Titan of Fire.
They took their knowledge of history – never forget the value of studying the past, my friend – and speculated that Blackrock might be used against Pyros as well as Hydros. They set about gathering as much of the dark material that they could, as well as collecting knowledge about the magics necessary to shape it. Drawing a pentagram upon the ground, the five began to call upon the Lord of Flame as ready to offer a sacrifice.

When Pyros appeared,
however, they instead
used a large chunk of Blackrock to bind him within. Trapped within the fragment, Pyros was unable to hurl fire from the great volcano, and to this day must perform
the minor requests of those who possess the Blackrock. I am saddened to say that the Sorcerers, as they are now called, are misunderstood and feared
– nay, loathed – by most Pagans. Considering the dangerous tasks
performed by their predecessors, it is a pity that such people would be hated so. Ah, the effects of ignorance...
